

FORMER FELLOW

ALLIE BREAM

PiAf 2010-11 Fellow with UN World Food Programme, Ethiopia

Before PiAf

Allie Bream graduated from Northwestern University in 2010 with a degree in Social Policy and Gender Studies. Before PiAf, Allie completed a community development project in Gulu, Uganda and worked at the Clinton Global Initiative University and World Relief.

During PiAf

Allie worked in the WFP Ethiopia Public Information Office in Addis Ababa, where she created internal and external communications, including newsletters, beneficiary stories, web materials, and an annual report. She visited pastoralists near the Kenyan/Ethiopian border affected by the Horn of Africa drought and planned a press conference for the Executive Director of WFP in the midst of the crisis.

After PiAf

Allie now works as the People Operations Senior Manager at One Acre Fund, a social enterprise that provides smallholder farmers with a complete service bundle designed to help clients grow their own way out of poverty.

“I would not be where I am today without my PiAf experience. My fellowship year gave me the opportunity to gain professional experience in East Africa at a large NGO. This is experience I never would have had access to otherwise, but was necessary for a career in development. My work now directly impacts Africa, and I remain connected to the continent, former colleagues, PiAf, and alumni.”

—Allie Bream, PiAf 2010-11 Fellow with UN World Food Programme, Ethiopia

BY THE NUMBERS

Since 1999, PiAf has placed nearly 400 Fellows in 35 African countries. For 2014-15, we had 49 Fellows working in 15 African countries with 30 fellowship organizations.

OUR MISSION

Princeton in Africa seeks to develop young leaders committed to Africa's advancement. To accomplish this, we offer opportunities for service through fellowships with a variety of organizations that work across the African continent.

Service for a Year

PiAf matches talented and passionate college graduates with organizations working across Africa for yearlong service placements. Our Fellows help our host organizations make meaningful changes on the ground, and are forever changed themselves in the process. Since our founding in 1999, we've sent nearly 400 Fellows to Africa. They've helped improve education and public health, source fresh water and alternative energy, increase family incomes, and so much more.

Commitment for a Lifetime

During their year of service, our Fellows create connections that last a lifetime. Some stay and continue to work in Africa; others leverage their experience to launch careers in international development. No matter where they go, our Fellows' experiences with Princeton in Africa transform their lives and perspectives about the world and their role within it.

Princeton in Africa is an independent nonprofit. We rely on the generosity of donors to sustain our program and fellowships. You can learn more about our program and ways to support it by visiting www.princetoninafrica.org.

WHO ARE OUR FELLOWS?

For our 2014-15 fellowship year, we had 49 Princeton in Africa Fellows from 35 different colleges and universities working with 30 organizations in 29 cities in 15 African countries.

Our Fellows came from 11 different countries and 15 states and spoke 23 languages. Princeton in Africa's fellowship program is open to graduates from any college or university accredited in the United States; some are enrolled in or have completed graduate-level studies. Most have prior internship experience and some have a year or more of professional work experience. They have specialized in a variety of fields—from politics and public policy to biology and engineering. Many hold African Studies certificates or have previously spent time in Africa or abroad. Some bring strong language skills, such as French or Swahili, or other specialized skills, such as experience with statistics, teaching, monitoring and evaluation or grant writing.

WHAT DO OUR FELLOWS DO?

PiAf's 2014-15 Fellows have:

- Taught English, math, science, and history/geography to secondary school students in Botswana
- Helped install three new water tanks in a village in Kenya
- Helped with the emergency response effort in Malawi after the worst floods in that country's history occurred

- Helped launch a maternal and child health program in four communities in rural Togo
- And so much more!

Princeton in Africa Fellows work in the following sectors:

Advocacy, Research & Civil Society

Agricultural Development

Business & Economic Development

Community-Level Development

Conflict Resolution & Peacebuilding

Education & Youth Capacity Building

Environment & Conservation

Income Generation

International Humanitarian Aid & Development

Public & Community Health

Social Entrepreneurs

SOCIAL ENTREPRENEURS

Many organizations have been recognized as social entrepreneurs!

WHO ARE OUR ORGANIZATIONS?

Since 1999, Princeton in Africa has worked with more than 70 organizations. PiAf fellowship organizations:

- Are engaged in numerous sectors, including education & youth capacity building, environment & conservation, and public health.
- Are located across the African continent
- Range from grassroots organizations to multinational operations, and include non-governmental organizations, international organizations, and corporations

We are always happy to consider adding new host organizations working on the African continent to our fellowship program.

What Organizations Gain

Hosting a PiAf Fellow benefits both Fellows and host organizations by creating opportunities for talented young people to serve in Africa and by providing effective, low-cost employees to organizations working in Africa. Organizations gain access to motivated, bright, energetic young adults with great writing, English, and critical thinking skills. PiAf recruits, screens and selects the best applicants to meet organizations' needs—saving them time and money—and then organizations ultimately make the final choice. With 450+ applicants for 45-50 fellowship posts, PiAf Fellows are exceptional.

WHO ARE OUR ALUMNI?

Since 1999, we have sent nearly 400 Fellows to Africa to work in 35 countries with more than 70 different fellowship organizations.

Following their year in Africa, our Fellows take very different paths—staying on with our fellowship organizations or other organizations in Africa, returning to the U.S. to continue building their international careers, or heading off to medical school, law school, or other graduate programs.

Today, PiAf alumni have diverse careers in nonprofit, business, government, and other sectors. They work for organizations such as the U.S. Department of State, USAID, UNICEF, World Health Organization, International Rescue Committee, Citibank, Deloitte, and smaller organizations doing great work in Africa, here in the U.S., and around the world. Alumni continue lives of service both in Africa and the U.S. long after their fellowships. They serve as advocates, board members, and founders of grassroots organizations that provide scholarships, public health, and other services across Africa. And they become leaders in the foreign policy community, working on issues such as HIV/AIDS policy and UN reform.
